Leech Removal

Editor:

Emily Dalton's article, "The Insurance Leech" (June 19), makes it abundantly clear that our health care "system" is broken. And even with "Obamacare," only a few Band-Aids are going to relieve some of the pain. But until profit is taken out of delivering health care, the bottom line will always be money and not people's health. Taking out profit, removing costs of promotion, corporate reward and unnecessary bureaucratic procedures (as Dalton experiences) is the only sustainable way to reduce costs and focus on people.

People in the state of California should be aware of a solution that has been waving its hand for over a decade. A plan similar to the single-payer program in Canada and in almost all modern, industrialized countries has been before our Legislature and was twice passed only to be vetoed by our former governor Schwarzenegger. It is called California One Care and its proponents are still working on delivering that logical and workable solution to the outrageous health care conundrum that Dalton documents in her own work.

Everyone should familiarize themselves with this time-tested solution by checking out the website CaliforniaOneCare.org, supporting it and telling others there is in fact a way out.

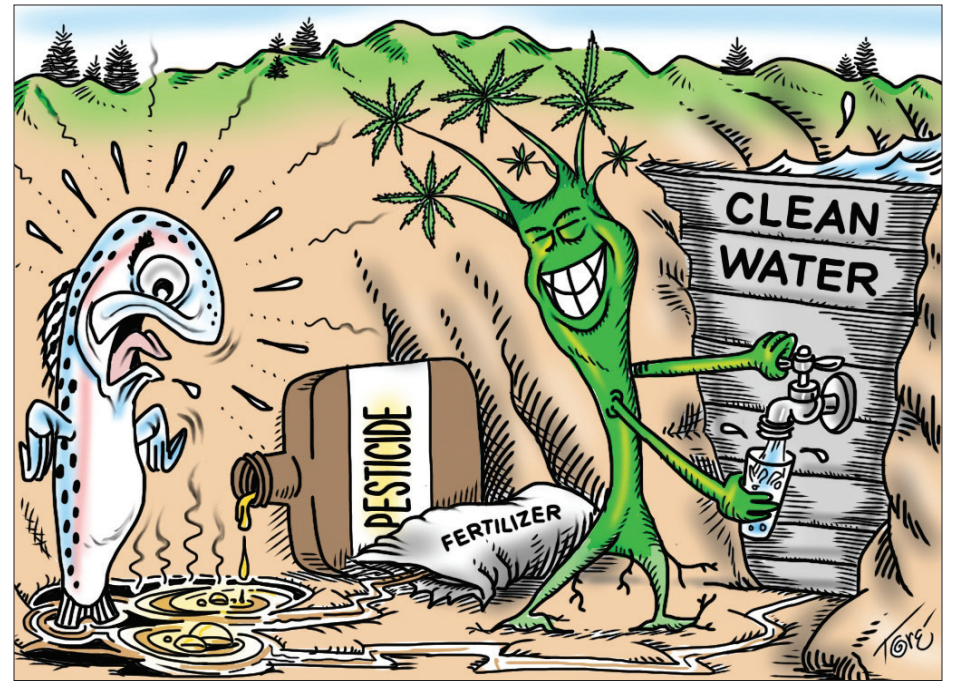

Patty Harvey, Willow Creek

Editor:

In response to the cover story ("Bait and Switch," June 12) and the doctor's article in the following issue about Anthem Blue Cross ("The Insurance Leech," June 19), my proverbial blood is boiling! It seems to me that when a business lies to its customers and has an extremely harmful financial effect, that is considered FRAUD! When fraud is committed then it should be investigated and tried in a court of law.

This points to the issue of corporate personhood but even goes beyond that. When people commit fraud and they are found guilty, they go to jail. When corporations (mostly large ones) have fraudulent and grossly negligent practices, if anything happens, the most they usually suffer is a fine. No one goes to prison and they are not pressured to change or shut down. So this is beyond corporate personhood. It is actually corporate hegemony. They have all the rights of a citizen and almost none of the liabilities.

The doctor is right on in her article.

CARTOON BY TERRY TORGERSON

Under our current profit system for health care, no matter what laws are passed to regulate the insurance companies, they somehow find a way to gouge us and make money. Many of us knew that when Obama was negotiating the Affordable Care Act that he really blew it by not offering a public option. This proves again that as long as corporate profit trumps human rights, as it does in our country, this type of outrageous sham will continue ad nauseam.

We need a single-payer, not-for-profit insurance system. And corporations like Anthem Blue Cross need to be investigated and prosecuted for their crimes. They need to be dismantled. They need to be held accountable.

Boo, Buhne

Editor:

I have both positive and negative comments to two recent blurbs. First of all, Ryan Hurley compares the Sequoia Park Zoo to a gulag ("Buhne Tribune," June 19). While our little zoo is by no means on the same level as zoos in larger cities, we do have a dedicated staff that maintains an excellent facility, is committed to educating the public and strives to continuously update the enclosures in which the animals reside. Simply because Mr. Hurley does not prefer to eat chicken (or meat) is no reason to act as if he is the omnipotent one because he prefers a vegan diet.

Also, I must applaud Dr. Emily Dalton for speaking out against the ridiculousness of the medical insurance industry and the socialist way our current administration is trying to "help" the citizens of America ("The Insurance Leech," June 19). Until people of all races, creeds and backgrounds stand up and say "enough is enough," we will continue to deal with the legalized extortion of insurance companies.

Cindi Rose, Rio Dell

Editor:

I just read Ryan Hurley's latest column in the June 19 edition, and I'm feeling the same thing as I did when I read his previous column — why?

Is it supposed to be funny, or social commentary, or what? I'm not really sure, because it fails, monumentally, in both of those arenas. Obviously, Hurley is an intelligent guy, but I find his observations awkward, cloying and not very amusing, though that's what he seems to be striving for.

Trash the Eureka Zoo. Great. That's constructive.

Use infantile language to belittle (the Lost Coast Outhouse). Clever.

Sophomoric commentary about the Crabs. Whatever.

Comparing sunny Blue Lake to the fall of the Roman Empire. Seriously?

It all feels like a stretch, and not a very entertaining one at that.

Failed Metaphor

Editor:

I don't usually comment publicly on other people's statements, but when I read a letter such as that written by John Hardin of Ettersburg ("Letters," June 26), I must say something.

The writer attempts to liken Jews of Humboldt County to marijuana growers to make some sort of metaphorical point. He writes about "the distinctive smell" of gefilte fish, and likens "visible mezuzahs and menorahs" to pot grows, of all things. But the clincher: "Would the county treat Jews as any other destructive, polluting and extracting industry?"

I did not read the rest of the letter, honestly, my hands were shaking and I was in shock. Any point Hardin was trying to make was lost. Jewish people have indeed been the subject of various ordinances, and have been rounded up and exterminated throughout history. Currently, France is in the midst of a huge resurgence of anti-Semitism.

There are still elderly people in this country with tattoo numbers on their arms, survivors of concentration camps. They came to this country seeking safety. There is huge PTSD in this community, and post-generational as well, with younger family members hearing the stories or being awoken at night by their parents or grandparents screaming in terror at vivid nightmares of torture.

To liken pot growers to Jewish people is offensive and ridiculous. If the point Hardin is trying to make is that pot growers are being treated like Jewish people throughout history, that is also offensive and ridiculous. Perhaps he is saying that pot growers are like Jews; greedy money grubbing resource extractors. Again,

Dropping Drug Time

Editor:

"Bongress" ("Week in Weed," June 5) notes pending legislation with possible "positive impacts" on defendants currently serving mandatory minimum sentences. The United States Sentencing Commission is accepting public comment on making drug guidelines retroactive. The deadline for public comment is July 7.

Congress established the commission in 1984 to guide federal sentencing policy and practices. Last year, the commission received more than 14,000 letters in response to its invitation for public comment during its annual review, which likely led to the review of drug guidelines.

After receiving more than 20,000 letters this year during a public comment period, the commission voted to reduce the sentencing guideline levels applicable to most federal drug offenders. In its April 10 press release, the "commission estimates that approximately 70 percent of federal drug trafficking defendants would qualify for the change, with their sentences decreasing an average of 11 months, or 17 percent, from 62 to 51 months on average."

Now, the commission is considering making these lower guidelines retroactive to drug offenders previously sentenced under the old guidelines.

A recent report by the National Research Council, "The Growth of Incarceration in the United States: Exploring Causes and Consequences," found that America's "unprecedented" levels of incarceration are resulting in great social harm:

"The United States has gone far past the point where the numbers of people in prison can be justified by social benefits and has reached a level where these high rates of incarceration themselves constitute a source of injustice and social harm."

Readers interested in the drug guidelines being made retroactive are urged to write the United States Sentencing Commission. Comments can be sent by email to public_comment@ussc.gov or by snail mail to U.S. Sentencing Commission, Attn: Public Affairs-Retroactivity Public Comment, One Columbus Circle, N.E., Suite 2-500, Washington, DC 20002-8002.

Fire Props

Editor:

Heidi Walters is to be commended for her fine article about the good and bad aspects of fire, and how tribes are trying to work cooperatively with the Forest Service to use fire as a management tool to protect the forests ("Good Fire, Bad Fire," June 19). She gave excellent background info about how fire was used historically by local tribes, and she did good research and found knowledgeable resource people to give different perspectives. The article hopefully will promote more cooperation as we go into an extremely dry and dangerous fire season.

Hog Riled

Pig ranchers lose their only local USDA-approved slaughterhouse

By Grant Scott-Goforth

grant@northcoastjournal.com

Humboldt County's pigs recently got a stay of execution, of sorts. A blessing for them, perhaps, but a whole trough of trouble for the many local hog raisers who lost the only nearby slaughterhouse capable of turning pigs into retail-worthy pork.

Humboldt County is home to a host of hog raisers, backyard farmers and small-scale ranchers who raise pigs for their families, friends, local grocery stores and restaurants. Those hogs are about to get fat, as Redwood Meat Co., based in Eureka, recently decided to stop processing hogs.

The decision to halt slaughtering pigs apparently came after a March notice from the United States Department of Agriculture's Food Safety and Inspection Service, which threatened to suspend Redwood Meat Co.'s federal certification after inspectors observed lambs being improperly slaughtered there.

"We proffered a plan to [the USDA] as a result of our suspension," Redwood Meat Co. plant manager Ryan Nylander said, adding that the plan includes increased monitoring of "critical control points" at the facility. After a 90-day verification process, during which time the company is continuing to process lambs, cattle and sheep, Nylander said it "will start entertaining the thought of doing pigs." That means costly improvements, including a hog machine and a "knock box," where the pigs are slaughtered. Though hogs were a "relatively small" part of its business, Nylander said he expects the company to process them again in the future.

A USDA spokeswoman said that Redwood Meat Co.'s hog processing had not received any sort of disciplinary action. "It didn't stop because of something that was wrong," she said.

But stop it did, and it seems many of the county's pork producers don't know it yet.

Sara Bleser sells a lot of pork to Wildberries and some directly to her customers. She has been raising pigs at her Mountainwise Ranch on the top of Kneeland for about three years. She would truck them live to Redwood Meat Co., where they would be cut and wrapped and delivered back to her in a USDA-certified freezer truck. When she called about two weeks ago to schedule a drop off, she was told the company wouldn't take them.

"My biggest problem is the lack of communication skills," Bleser said. "I don't have a clear understanding about what's going on over there."

Bleser processes two to three pigs a month typically, and now she's deciding whether to haul her pigs down to Petaluma to be processed. There's about a two-week window where her heritage breed pigs are ripe for slaughter — wait too long and they'll get too fat, making the cuts less than ideal, she said. But hauling pigs south has a host of problems, not the least of which is the cost of the nearly 500-mile roundtrip.

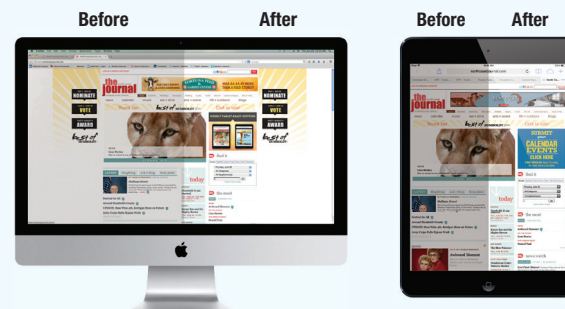

Those costs will likely have to be passed onto the customer, an idea that Bleser cringes at. One of the goals of her business, which she says has been growing steadily to try and meet the county's demand for high quality pork, is to provide healthy meat for a good price. "I have this desire to have quality food for myself and my family, and through that I found the ability to share that with the community," she said, adding that people around here appreciate food that's raised, processed and sold locally. "I enjoy having a hands-on approach and knowing exactly where my food comes from."

Customers want locally raised organic meat, according to Arcata Co-op meat department manager Ralph Smith, who added that the grocery store has a hard time keeping pork in stock because of its popularity. "Everyone keeps asking," he said. "The demand is there."

a victory, Bleser said a longer trip is harder on animals headed to slaughter. "A 250-mile journey in the back of a trailer is really stressful on an animal," she said, "and it's debatable how it affects the product."

The trip back is no peach, either. Bleser said she would need a freezer truck to haul back the meat she intends to sell to fulfill both the USDA's and Wildberries' standards. "I'm a rancher and a farmer. I'm not really a freezer truck commercial driver."

Despite her recent frustrations, Bleser said Redwood Meat Co. has been a valuable community resource. "I'm hugely appreciative of what Redwood [Meat Co.] does for this county," she said. "Not every county has a USDA-approved processor. We're super fortunate. It's just scary that that might be taken away."

Redwood Meat Co. wasn't the only place to get a hog chopped up. It was simply the only USDA-certified facility. Any animal being sold to the public, whether retail or directly from the farm's freezer, has to be killed and butchered at an inspected plant. There are mobile butchers and others around the area that offer the same services for people who are only raising livestock (or collecting game) for personal consumption.

"Redwood Meats, in general, has proven to be an excellent company that cares about the producers locally," said Jeff Stackhouse, the livestock and natural resources advisor for the UC California Cooperative Extension. But a loss of hog processing could hurt the small-ranching industry and the local economy. "[Hog processing] is something that the local producers really need, the 4-H kids really need," he said. "That's something the community could potentially be hurt from."

Redwood Meat Co. will still process goats, sheep and cattle, and Stackhouse listed some of the other North State USDA-approved processors: Belcampo in Yreka pretty much does everything, he says, and "they're also fairly well known for being expensive"; Johansen's Meat Processing in Orland takes sheep and beef; Superior Farms in Dixon takes only sheep and goats; and Wadsworth, "in Glenn County somewhere," does hogs. Stackhouse said prices at different facilities vary widely.

There being relatively few processors, Redwood Meat Co. is understandably important to ranchers beyond the borders of Humboldt County. The Mendocino Board of Supervisors sent a letter earlier this year supporting a bill introduced by Assemblyman Wes Chesbro that would continue to exempt livestock carriers from restrictions on certain portions of Highway 101. "It is extremely common for these trailers to travel the U.S. Highway 101 route from Mendocino County to Humboldt County where there is a USDA-certified meat processing facility," wrote chair of the board John Pinches. "The continuation of this exemption would allow our County's ranchers to keep their livelihoods without the added stress of an additional regulation to think about."

While small ranchers often raise hogs year-round, Stackhouse said summer months — June to August, particularly — see the most hogs sent to slaughterhouses. It's also fair season, when youth peddle their livestock at auctions. Stackhouse said kids who raise hogs won't be directly impacted by the lack of a local processor, but it does complicate things.

"This is more felt by the buyers or the people running the fair," Stackhouse said. "[Kids] sell the animal to local businesses that support the youth for above-and-beyond market value. They're really essentially giving youth money for college funds and supporting them in their willingness to work. They might not care about the livestock industry at all."

It's the fair board or the buyers, depending on the arrangement, that are responsible for getting the animal to a slaughterhouse and telling the processor how they want it cut and wrapped. "The kid puts the hog on a truck and trailer and the kid gets a check and it's out of the child's hands."

Terry Coltra, president of the Friends of Redwood Acres, said this year's youth auction at the Best of Humboldt Fair was more difficult. The fair had to hire a livestock hauler to transport pigs sold during the auction to Petaluma between 5 a.m. and 5:30 a.m. on the morning of June 24 at an additional cost of $800, which comes out of the junior livestock auction's budget, he said. The realization that they wouldn't be able to process hogs locally came up just before the fair, on top of everything else. "The fair in itself is a task to put on," he said, but "we were able to get through it. I think more than anything it's going to affect all kinds of production around locally."

Smith mainly stocks the Arcata Co-op's large meat department with pork from Alexander Farm in Crescent City, supplementing it with hogs he buys from 4-Hers at the local fairs. Not this year though — he'd begun to hear rumors that Redwood Meat Co. wouldn't be processing hogs any longer. "I didn't buy one just because I'd heard that," Smith said. "So, all I bought was lamb." ●

Has anyone else noticed the erroneous TV schedule listing for the Access Humboldt channel?

On the first and third Tuesday evenings of each month, for instance, Access's local government channel has apparently been airing old episodes of the Addams Family. According to my TV schedule, that time slot is supposed to be reserved for meetings of the Eureka City Council. Weird.

Not that I'm complaining. I can't get enough of my favorite character — the deadpan, Frankensteinian "monster." Although thinking back, I don't remember Lurch reading so many dull, civic proclamations into a microphone or, for that matter, constantly asking Morticia and Uncle Fester to vote on stuff.

Ranking the News

Is even-handed coverage of the marijuana industry important to you? If so, you're reading the right paper.

A master's thesis recently published by Humboldt State University student Ian Huddon-Cossar concludes that the North Coast Journal is "the most holistically informed" newspaper in Humboldt County when it comes to reporting on cannabis issues. Huddon-Cossar's methodology ranked papers lower for engaging in one-sided coverage (either pro-grower or pro-law-enforcement), and higher for more balanced reporting.

Based on articles published between 1995 and 2010, "Media Ownership and Cannabis In Humboldt County News Media" arrives at the unexpected conclusion that the most pro-police newspapers are those nearest the weed-industry epicenter: Southern Humboldt Life and Times and Redwood Times. Huddon-Cossar singles these publications out for parrot-law enforcement orthodoxy in covering marijuana issues.

Were Huddon-Cossar's findings inclusive of the 2014 media landscape, one wonders what his analysis would make of online outlets that seemingly publish a sheriff's press release for every single weed bust from Eureka to Orleans.

I mean, is it really news when someone goes to Death Valley and gets a sunburn???

What Goes Up...

Are you doing everything possible to pollute Humboldt Bay?

If you're a lucky resident of Arcata or Humboldt Hill — and own a toilet — chances are you've already made your "contribution" to spoiling Humboldt's tidal waters.

For everyone else, it's time to dig deep. For a limited time only, your tax-deductible contribution can help poison the harbor, while celebrating the birth of our country — all at the same time!

Having raised only half of the $30,000 needed to ensure showers of toxic junk will explode on schedule over bay waters this Fourth of July, Eureka's annual Independence Day fireworks drive is pleading for your support.

Tree-hugger types warn that your generous donation could end up celebrating the red (strontium), white (aluminum) and blue (copper) in ways you probably hadn't imagined (do you take perchlorates with your patriotism?) above the skies of Woodley Island.

While studies do not link fireworks with any long-term health effects, it doesn't take a scientist to tell us that when you blow up a veritable children's chemistry set, it's gotta' come down somewhere.

Cyndy Day-Wilson: A Star Is Born?

A late member of the Eureka City Council has leveled disturbing charges of dishonesty against the city attorney, setting off speculation about the professional consequences of fibbing to the boss.

In a three-page affidavit and an accompanying investigative report released a month after his death, Lance Madsen all but accuses Cyndy Day-Wilson of dangling from a telephone wire, pants fully engulfed.

The affidavit centers on former police officer Madsen's looksie into the circulation of a memo supposedly authored by erstwhile City Manager William Panos. Ms. Day-Wilson leaked the confidential, council-eyes-only memorandum to city staff, Madsen declares, casting a dark cloud over City Hall.

Although claiming never to have read it himself, the emotional devastation unleashed by the Panos Dossier upon city rank-and-file led Madsen to the daring conclusion that the memo probably didn't say, "Surprise! Everyone gets a free iPad!"

But the question is, even if the allegations against Ms. Day-Wilson are proven true, can she be sent packing?

You decide: The city attorney is one of just three city employees who serve "at the pleasure" of the city council (the other two are the city manager and city clerk). The city attorney's employment terms are — unlike almost every other city employee — governed not by union regulations or an MOU, but by a simple, 12-page contract between the employee and city council.

Under the heading "Termination and Severance Pay," the contract provides that the council reserves the right to terminate Ms. Day-Wilson's employment for cause and "without liability for any severance pay whatsoever" for, among other enumerated breaches, "any acts of dishonesty."

According to Madsen, this wasn't just any act of dishonesty — say, a white lie to opposing counsel or a disgruntled citizen — but one right to the face of a sitting councilman.

Although Madsen sadly succumbed to illness in April, he "names names" of potentially corroborating witnesses. At this time, neither the city council as a whole nor Ms. Day-Wilson have commented on the charges.

My question is, "Why not?" This thing has a huge upside!

Should the council conclude that she fibbed and isn't so enthralled with the click-clack of her Donna Karans, it's probably true that Ms. Day-Wilson won't be nominated for Citizen of the Month.

But think about it: She could star in a remake of the 1997 Jim Carrey comedy, Liar, Liar. An actual (or as the case may be, former) attorney would be perfect in the role of the underhanded lawyer who undergoes an "awakening" to tell the truth.

Barring that — and provided she keeps her law license — Ms. Day-Wilson could always get work at another municipality. But she may want to start her search a little ways down the food chain.

Anyone know if the Palm Springs Snow Removal District is hiring? ●

ENVIRONMENT/NATURAL RESOURCES

Historically Dry

June 30 brought the close of the 2013-2014 water year, and it will go down in history as one of the driest ever recorded in Eureka. According to measurements by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration's station at Woodley Island Marina, the area recorded about .35 inches of unexpected rainfall in June, bringing the year's total to 21.11 inches, just 52 percent of the 30-year average. For those keeping score at home, 2013-2014 will go down as the third driest year on record since the folks with NOAA began keeping track, trailing only the 17.56 inches of rain recorded in the historic drought year of 1976-1977 and the 20.72 inches that came down in 1923-1924. For some perspective on just how serious this drought year was, take a look at this graph, on which we've detailed this year's month-by-month precipitation totals, as well as those for 1976-1977 and the 30-year average.

CRIME

Arcata Woman Dies in Crash

Camille Louise Rand, 26, of Arcata, was killed in a rollover crash north of Redcrest June 28.

The crash occurred at about 8:30 p.m. when Jonathan Rosales, 35, of Bayside, lost control of his 2005 Dodge Ram pickup while driving southbound on U.S. Highway 101. It rolled multiple times before traveling down an embankment and coming to rest against a small grove of trees, according to the California Highway Patrol.

Rand was ejected from the vehicle and sustained fatal injuries. Rosales was transported to Redwood Memorial Hospital with major injuries and later flown to Santa Rosa. His condition is unknown. A second passenger, Russell Jay Green, 34, of Eureka, was treated and released at a local hospital.

No one in the vehicle was wearing a seatbelt at the time of the crash. Drugs and/or alcohol are believed to have been a factor, and the CHP says it's pursuing charges against Rosales of driving under the influence and causing injury.

EDUCATION

Our Miss California

Saturday night, June 28, at the William Saroyan Theatre in toasty downtown Fresno, Miss California 2014 was crowned after a buoyant Broadway-themed spectacular performed by the 54 contending young women. Among them was one of our own: Humboldt State University kinesiology student Kathryn Faull, Miss Central California Regional 2014.

Faull's a Stockton native. And while — hold on, now, all you pageant haters, let me finish. And while (judging by her Facebook page), Faull seems as bubbly, girly and polished as any self-respecting pageant lover could hope, she's no flibbertigibbet. It's doubtful anyone too flighty could rise this high in the contest. They compete for higher education scholarships, for one, and that's what drew in Faull, according to a quote in The Fresno Bee:

"As a child, I swore that I would never be a pageant girl," Faull said. "However, when I knew I would be attending Humboldt State, I knew I needed scholarships."

Contestants had to raise money for scholarships and for the Children's Miracle Network hospitals. Last year, according to the Miss America Organization, it and its state and local organizations gave out $45 million in cash and scholarships, "making it the world's largest single source of scholarships for women."

And the winner is? Miss Yosemite Valley Marina Inserra.

BUSINESS

Busy at the Pulp Mill

Trucks have hauled away about half of the toxic pulping liquors from the defunct Samoa Pulp Mill, and the crawl of tankers continues steadily up to Longview, Wash., where the liquors are being refined and reused by a mill.

Humboldt Bay Harbor, Recreation and Conservation District CEO Jack Crider said the process has been smooth except for a three-week period where the boiler at the destination mill underwent repairs. That shutdown had a silver lining though, as workers on the Samoa site were able to go home for a while. "A lot of those folks had been on property there for four months," Crider said.

He said the cleanup employs a dozen to 20 people. "Add that along with the truck drivers and we're actually creating a little bit of an economic boom."

The Harbor District is working to lease

a portion of the property to Coast Seafoods. Taylor Shellfish will also produce oysters at the former pulp mill site. And a pellet manufacturer has agreed to lease space at the mill. Crider said another business is in talks as well, but he couldn't identify the business because of a non-disclosure agreement.

Crider said the Environmental Protection Agency is continuing to investigate Evergreen, the company that abandoned the mill in 2008. The Harbor District has assumed responsibility for hauling the liquors off site, but Crider says the costs of the other cleanup should fall to Evergreen. "We feel very strongly that they are the responsible party."

School District bond measure failed to get the necessary 55 percent to pass.

Kerrigan, meanwhile, is still not talking about a potential run for Eureka mayor. He filed paperwork to raise money for that office then rescinded it to run for supervisor. "I'm certainly looking forward to a number of potential possibilities," he said. "I haven't made any final decisions. I feel, likely, that I will run again at some point for public office. THE NEW LITTLE FREE LIBRARY IN OLD TOWN.

Look, it's an LFL

That's a "Little Free Library" to the uninitiated. And, according to our very own master of the field notes, Journal contributor Barry Evans, there's a new one in town. Evans and his wife, Louisa Rogers, are in fact responsible for the thing, which resides on the Snug Alley backside of the Redwood Curtain Theatre.

But what is it?

"It's a simple idea," says Evans. "Take a book, leave a book, feel free to browse. All it takes is a small weatherproof box with a window showing the books inside, and the regular attention of a steward to tidy books up and make sure there are always — in our case, 40 to 50 — books on hand plus an assortment of magazines."

And it's open all the time. Rogers got the idea for the library after she saw one in Madison, Wis. "A trip to the local thrift store, a spot of carpentry, and four long bolts was all it took to create The Redwood Curtain Theatre Little Free Library, No. 15,424," says Evans.

The Little Free Library concept arose in Wisconsin in 2009, Evans says. Now there are more than 15,000 in the world — including three others already in Humboldt: in Arcata on the side of Leslie Rohan's house at 841 13th St.; at 1641 Highland St. in Bayside, stewarded by Gordon and Iris Inkeles; and in Arcata at the Jacoby Storehouse, run by Mary Gifford of The Rocking Horse.

Learn more about it at littlefreelibrary.org. Or you can pester Evans: baryevans9@yahoo.com.

Locals

By Linda Stansberry

newsroom@northcoastjournal.com

You never stop being from where you're from, but you stop being a local by degrees. You get a house in town and don't make as many of those long trips into the hills. You get a truck without four-wheel drive. You stop coming out for the school fundraisers. You stop recognizing the kids. You stop being recognized on the store porch. Then, one day, you walk into your small town's lone bar and get treated like a tourist. It hurts, the gradual loss of inclusion. But it's a pain you choose, because being a local in marijuana country often comes at a price too high to pay.

To be local is to sit in a courtroom and listen to your neighbor describe how he dredged a pond and buried your cousin's body in the damp soil, then lined the indentation with a tarp and filled it with water so the cadaver dogs wouldn't find it. To be local is to sit behind the defendant and study the whorl of his hair, cut conservatively close to his scalp for the trial. To be local is to hug his brother in the hallway. You've known him since grade school. You've known them all — the neighbor who owned the grow, the kid accused of murdering your cousin, his family — your entire life. While the jury is deliberating you hear a lawyer make a joke to his colleague about meth, weed and job security. They snigger. You glare. They walk away. You walk back into the courtroom shoulder to shoulder with your childhood friend, hoping separately for different verdicts.

To be local is to enter a conspiracy of silence. It used to be a neighborly silence and now it's a silence enforced by fear. A dog poisoned. A gate ripped down. A truck abandoned on a back road, the VIN scratched off, the tags gone.

To be local is to know where the bodies are buried.

To be local is to watch scars open on hillsides and diesel soak into the soil as rivers become creeks and creeks become gullies.

To be local is to never call the cops. To be local is to have no one to call. To be local is to never be able to point a finger without having a dozen pointed back at you.

And so, to be local is to be complicit in thousands of small, unreported tragedies: truancy, neglect, rape, abuse, addiction. It's to have children and never have the right words to warn them against growing up too fast and too hard.

To be local is to be shunned when you have the audacity to point out that something is very, very wrong.

To be local is to watch our boys climb behind the wheels of trucks they're too drunk to drive night after night after night. It's to place flowers at the side of the county road and bite your tongue as someone says heartfelt words about a life cut short but nothing about the lives we didn't value enough to broach an uncomfortable silence.

To be local is to occasionally feel like you're going crazy with grief, crazy with guilt, plain crazy because it feels like you're being told to be polite in the face of dysfunction, desperation and murder.

To be local is to practice myopia with good reason. You plant your seed, you raise your kids, you keep your head down and you get to live a life that includes some of our most cherished American ideals: entrepreneurship, community, independence. To be local is to cultivate good neighbors. The volunteer fire department responds to emergency calls. Everyone is invited to weddings. Your truck is never stuck on the side of the road for long. Conversations are held from driver's side windows. This is the place I love best, and I am sick with fear that by speaking I've forfeited my right to be welcomed there.

The weed is not the problem. The secrecy is. The secrecy is a continuum that begins with children being hushed and ends with my cousin being put down like a mad dog because meth made it impossible for him to keep his mouth shut. When you're from where I'm from, grow culture becomes your culture whether you grow or not. But a culture that functions on secrecy will inevitably be exploited by despots and thugs.

To be local is to open your mouth and then lock your door. To be local is to be offered a gun by someone you love, and consider taking it. To be local is to speak your mind at the risk of losing your life. To be local is to be told in a thousand ways, explicitly and implicitly, that you must be silent. But to truly love where you are from is to refuse. ●

What's in a Face?

All five senses dwell there, competing for the mind's attention. Your emotions are most acutely expressed by the twitch of your cheek and brow muscles. The face is a translator, making each of us fluent in the universal human language.

You wear your history on your face — the blessings and the struggles. And, perhaps, you wear your future there as well.

Portraits are often the most dynamic photographs, capturing a moment but also telling an entire story — or at least hinting at one. Portraits can be eerie or inviting, but they are inescapably relatable. We are looking at ourselves.

What makes a face “Humboldt”? We left that up to the readers and amateur photographers who submitted more than 100 photographs of their families and friends — human and otherwise. And here, curated by discerning Journal staff, are the best of the bunch. From peachfuzzed infant cheeks to grizzly beards, this is you, Humboldt. And it is good.

Angie and Ty

Angie Verville

Allyn and Caralee

Murphy's Salutes Angie Verville

"I care more about people now," says Angie Verville. "And I try to make it a little more personal."

It's generally part of the customer experience to have a staff member ask people how their day is going. It's a standard question, generally pretty rote small talk that employees are expected to do. Murphy's Market Cutten shoppers find in Angie someone who is genuinely interested in them. "I think customers appreciate that more," she says. "I often have people telling me really important stuff about their lives."

It's not just that Angie is trained at getting people to open up. The last several years have been challenging, to say the least. The Cutten native's experience have made her feel more compassion toward others.

Six years ago, she'd experienced a string of bad luck and was down on the world. "I had had a tough time and had given up on humanity," she says. Things improved. She found the right person, gaining a partner in her girlfriend Caralee, who came along with two young kids and Angie found herself a kind of instant mom. That family bliss was tested when the youngest Ty, at age 4, was diagnosed with T-cell lymphoma and a cancerous mass at the center of his chest. The news might have sidelined other young families, but they rose to the occasion. "We had to grow up real quick," says Angie.

Months of travel to Bay Area clinics and invasive procedures caused Angie to make the decision to be the stay-at-home mom, holding everything together. And somehow, strength and fortune won out. "Now he's my 100-pound 9-year old," she says about the budding football player. "He is my superman."

"We have amazing kids. His sister (13-year old Allyn) had to deal with a lot." The life lessons stuck with Allyn who recently grew her hair and cut it for the charity Locks of Love which donates to cancer patients. Caralee took the experience to heart, too, becoming a medical assistant at Eureka Pediatrics, helping out children who experience hardship daily. "It helps her be a better person," says Angie. "A better mom. All of it."

"I love my job," Verville says. "I honestly love my job. I don't know how to explain it, it's just that." Her experience and work ethic helped her move quickly up the ranks to supervisor at the Cutten Murphy's, where she found community in her customers, coworkers and neighborhood. It's her place. She walks to work every day and usually has a half-dozen Cutten residents waving hello. "My coworkers know my kids and my kids really like everyone down here," she says. Ty and Allyn are frequently down for a Murphy's deli sandwich. "This place gives me everything I need."

As transformative as Angie's life experiences were, she says the attentiveness to shoppers extends throughout the Murphy's family. It's how business is done there. "Customer service is really what we're about," she says. "If they have a special request, we'll bring it in. If you need help, we're right there. A lot of the bigger stores aren't like that. But we try to remember what it's like just to be a regular customer."

Being part of the Cutten community is a big part of that. When shoppers and Murphy's staff work and live together, their children attending school and playing sports together, it's only natural that relationships are going to carry into Murphy's Market. "What better people to hang out with," Angie says.

DOWN AND DIRTY

July To-Dos

By Genevieve Schmidt

downddirty@northcoastjournal.com

With temperatures rising and both vegetable gardens and landscaped areas hitting their stride, there's a lot to be done in the garden and it's easy to fall behind. Not only are there the usual tasks like weeding and deadheading, but some plants are outgrowing their spaces, the daily vegetable harvest is picking up speed, and, while our impulse is to take a break from planning and planting the garden at this time of year, a bit of time spent thinking ahead will ensure a bountiful and attractive autumn and winter. Here's what to do in July.

Keep plants in place with a quick trim. Many shrubs and perennials crowd each other at this time of year because they are all blooming and growing. While it's tempting to attack overgrown shrubs with hedging shears, please, for the love of all that is good, pick up your hand pruners and take the time to make subtle individual cuts all over the plant for a more natural look. Gently clip plants off the house, out of walkways and off of neighboring shrubs if they are getting a little too up close and personal. Many plants benefit from "skirting," which is when you remove any branches that are within 6 inches of the ground. This allows better airflow to prevent diseases and gives rhododendrons and others a more open appearance.

Check for bare spots. Plants are at their largest right now, so it's a good time to identify bare spots in the garden where you might tuck in more plants. If you enjoy the serendipity of an ever-changing garden, consider re-seeding flowering plants such as the gothy, dark-bloomed Black Barlow columbine (Aquilegia 'Black Barlow'), peach, apricot and gold-colored Flashback calendula (Calendula officinalis 'Flashback'), or good old California poppies (Eschscholzia californica), in the usual vibrant orange or in deep red, cream, pink, or fluffy, double-petaled versions. Adding fast-growing herbs such as parsley and dill in bare spots is a tasty way to temporarily fill up empty spaces. By planting now, you can enjoy flowers this summer, then let them go to seed in fall to enjoy a return on your investment next spring.

Control rose pests and diseases organically. Aphids, black spot and powdery mildew are rearing their ugly heads in the rose garden right now, and if your plants are suffering, there are some organic techniques that can help. For aphids, a simple spray of horticultural soap is effective at smothering just the insects that are coating the flower buds. For fungal issues, you can either pick off and destroy the damaged leaves, use a commercial sulfur spray, or use a mixture of one part milk and two parts water sprayed once a week to help prevent new damage.

Of course, the most effective cure is prevention. Save yourself some work by keeping rose litter picked up so pests and disease can't hide in it, and encourage aphid-eating beneficial insects to visit by planting lavender, ornamental and culinary sage, daisies and yarrow nearby to attract them. If you are going this route, it is a good idea to avoid spraying neem, pyrethrum and other broad-spectrum insecticides because they don't discriminate in which bugs they kill.

Plant vegetables for fall harvest. Though your harvest of brassicas, greens, herbs and peas may be starting to overwhelm, don't let today's bounty cloud your view of the months to come. Continue starting seeds or transplants of beans, peas, cilantro, basil, lettuce, carrots, parsnips and beets so your harvest doesn't run dry. Winter-hardy vegetables can also be started now. Broccoli, kohlrabi, Swiss chard, kale, Brussels sprouts and cabbage will keep your fridge stocked with delicious ingredients for cole slaws, green smoothies and stir fries as the temperatures cool.

Prevent blight on tomatoes. Here on the North Coast, if the lack of heat doesn't make for a disappointing tomato experience, tomato blight could break your heart. Tomato blights are caused by a number of diseases which damage both the fruit and plants. The best way to prevent blight is to water plants at the base rather than overhead. Another remedy sounds odd but has numerous enthusiastic proponents among the original DIYers, the over-70 crowd: Use soured milk or cream, diluted 50-50 with water and poured directly over the foliage and into the soil around tomatoes. This helps keep calcium in the soil and prevents diseases from taking hold. A preventative spray with organic copper fungicide each week can also keep blight at bay, though you'll want to wash your fruit before eating.

Keep it cool with blue and purple flowers. If you don't want the expense and fuss of a water feature, consider planting some cool-hued flowers to bring the visual temperature down this summer. Azure Rush hardy cranesbill (Geranium 'Azure Rush') has a dwarf habit which fits into the foreground of the landscape better than the larger and more common Rozanne hardy cranesbill. Phenomenal lavender (Lavandula x intermedia 'Phenomenal') brings the bees buzzing and releases its fragrance when planted next to a patio or path, while Cat's Meow catmint (Nepeta x faassennii 'Cat's Meow') is a non-flopping, compact version of catmint which requires less primping to look good. All can tolerate limited water in the landscape if given a thick layer of mulch.

Shop for switchgrass and fountain grass at the nursery. These two ornamental grasses emerge later from dormancy than most grasses. Yet, even with a shorter growing season, both grasses have a great deal to offer. Switchgrass (Panicum) has a columnar form and airy flower heads that wave gracefully in the air on our windy summer days. Meanwhile, fountain grass (Pennisetum) has adorable, fluffy poofs and a longer bloom season than most grasses. That said, choose your fountain grass carefully. Varieties with green foliage tend to tolerate our climate like champs and can be planted in the ground. However, purple-leaved and variegated varieties often end up being annuals in our climate, so they should be purchased in large pots and appreciated intensely while they last. ●

Peas, butter and homemade cheese

By Jada Calypso Brotman

tabletalk@northcoastjournal.com

I love fresh seasonal vegetables swimming in fat. I would be content on a diet of fresh veggies and butter, with candy for entertainment. Is it humanly possible to dislike a simple perfect garden tomato, sliced, sugared, salted and drizzled with olive oil and vinegar? Cabbage shredded and fried in butter and caraway seeds? Kale simmered with stock, olive oil and garlic? Radishes sliced thin on buttered bread? Onions fried in duck fat and vinegar? And maybe, to finish, a chunk of maple fudge?

And I call shenanigans on kids not liking peas. When there's a scene in a movie with Sulky Kid pushing peas around a plate, I think there's something wrong with the writer or the kid because who could not like fresh peas? I'm going to go so far as to call them nature's candy, like that annoying smug hippie lady — remember, the one who gave you boxes of raisins on Halloween? I'm taking on that ghastly role for a minute to extoll the scrumptiousness of peas. I'm eating peas in the shell right now! It's delightful! Crisp and thirst quenching and snacky, not stringy like celery or irritating like carrots (endless, tedious chewing with raw carrots), but neat and clean and fun to eat. I love any food with an edible package, a tiny but august genre that also includes kumquats and Botan rice candy.

I suppose you don't need instructions on how to eat peas, but there's a chance you might get tired of cold, raw food, so here are two wonderful ways to cook fresh peas. If you don't like peas after trying these, then I'll eat my hat. And then some more of that maple fudge. You can make these recipes in winter, too, with frozen peas, but you already know what I'm going to say. Seasonal.

Peas and Paneer, or Best Peas Ever in the Universe

Can't even deal with the greatness of this dish. It seems hard with the paneer, but trust me, it's only hard to mess up. Serves 4.

Ingredients and method:

For the paneer:

1 quart whole milk
Juice of one lemon
Clean dishtowel or fine cheesecloth

Carefully bring the milk to a low simmer in a large, heavy-bottomed saucepan and stir in the lemon juice. Watch with interest as the milk curdles. Stir until the curdling has finished, maybe 90 seconds, then drain it in a colander until cool enough to handle. Squeezing out fluid as you go, scoop the curds into a waiting square of clean dishtowel or fine-meshed cheesecloth. Pull up the corners of the material to form a little sack, tie the ends around your faucet and hang the curds to drain over the sink for an hour or so.

For the peas:

2 cups of fresh peas, shelled
4 tablespoons clarified butter
1 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon ground cumin
½ teaspoon cayenne pepper
1 teaspoon coriander seeds
Peanut oil

Melt the butter in a large frying pan and pour in the peas. Clarified butter is easy to make and won't burn or brown — always keep a jar in the fridge. If you must, you can substitute 2 tablespoons butter and 2 tablespoons oil, which will raise the smoking point of the fat. Add the salt, cumin and cayenne pepper.

Cook your peas over low heat for 15 minutes, shaking the pan occasionally. Then add the coriander seeds, turn the heat up to medium and cook for one more minute before removing it from heat.

Now, back to your paneer. With your hands, form it into large pea shapes. In another frying pan with high sides, heat up a generous ½ inch of peanut oil. The paneer balls are crumbly, so gently fry them for one minute, until mostly browned. Don't fuss over them in the pan, or they'll fall apart. Remove the paneer from the oil with a slotted spoon, drain on a paper towel and add it to the pan of peas. Reheat the mixture for a minute or two, not stirring, just jostling the pan, and serve immediately.

Easier Peas That Are Still Very Good. With Mint.

Serves 4.

Ingredients and method:

1 cup fresh shelled peas
1 cup sugar snap peas in the pod, ends trimmed
2 minced scallions
2 tablespoons minced fresh mint
1 tablespoon butter
1 tablespoon olive oil
2 teaspoons balsamic vinegar
1 teaspoon sugar
Salt and lots of pepper
½ cup fresh grated parmesan (optional)

Heat a pot of salted water to a boil, then put the shelled peas in a strainer and lower it into the water. Boil for 3 minutes. Remove the peas and run them under cold water, then dump them in a bowl. Do the same for one minute longer with the peas in the pod.

In a sauté pan, heat the butter and oil over medium heat. Add the scallions and cook until softened, 4-5 minutes. Add sugar, vinegar and mint and cook for 2 more minutes. Turn off the heat and add the peas. Give a good shake and mix, then salt and pepper to taste. Sprinkle on the parmesan before serving, if desired. ●

July's Arts! Alive is packed

By Ken Weiderman

artbeat@northcoastjournal.com

Remember being a kid and staring wide-eyed at one of those all-you-can eat buffets? The overwhelming, giddy-in-your-toes excitement over what to pick first? Well, this month's Arts! Alive features a spread so stocked with goodies that I can't pick just one. So let's have a taste of the highlights, shall we? And, like that kid at the buffet, we're going straight for the dessert.

First on your not-to-miss list this month is Joan Gold's intrepid exhibition at Humboldt State University's First Street Gallery. At what she calls "a joyful 80," Humboldt's premier colorist is filling the entire space. Fields of color and pattern form a dazzling parade from one end of the gallery to the other. The airy, high-ceilinged front half of the gallery presents recent works with big-city polish. Gold's paintings are given room to breathe, allowing viewers to pause upon her lush arrangements swelling with brilliant color. The other half of the gallery offers up a completely different serving of her work.

Stepping into the cozier confines of the back room delivers viewers into an Oz-like installation inspired by Gold's studio. There are no easels or paintbrushes scattered about, but dozens and dozens of Gold's colorful rectangles circle the space.

As part of her process, Gold works on many different panels of color at a time, playing around to achieve the right hue, pattern or surface. "These are not paintings," she says, "they are like toys to me." Once a toy is complete, it's pinned up on the ever-changing array of colorful papers flooding her studio walls. Eventually, some come together into a finished piece, but others never find a match. "So in this show," Gold says, "there are pieces that are 20 years old that finally found their little family."

There's a certain sacrifice in displaying her work in this raw, unfinished state. These panels, each one more eccentric than the last, aren't meant to be evaluated, criticized or interpreted. Visitors are meant to enjoy them, to wander through them and marvel at the spectacle. Gold couldn't be more excited, saying, "It's my joy that I'm sharing!"

So where do you go after soaking up Gold's colors? Piante Gallery's exhibition of Lori Goodman's new works, Journeys, is a good choice. Goodman's sensitive sculptures, installations and wall hangings proclaim a love of paper, form and travel. One room shivers with luscious reds, flooding the walls like the royal velvet of a king's throne room. Another room drips with dangling, chunky sculptures inspired by yak butter cheese. Like sausages on a string, hand-made paper is stretched over wire armatures that blow in the wind each time a visitor enters the door. Some may see French fries, others, musical instruments. The diversity of Goodman's shapes references the natural materials used in her work, and strolling among them ignites those primal parts of our brains that connect us to the earth.

COLOR AND CONTRAST IN MIMI LAPLANT'S "SAFE HARBOR" AT THE BLACK FAUN GALLERY.

Your next Arts! Alive stop might include a pause for coffee, wine or ice cream, but keep going, there's more!

Over at Sewell Gallery fine art, two wildly different painters take the stage. Adrienne Werth's exhibit, It's Just My Nature, brings this watercolor painter's work back to the public after an extended break from painting. Thought-provoking compositions of natural materials like crabs, onions, skulls and carrots ask viewers to look anew at common items, highlighting the connectedness, and importance, of the small things we might overlook. Next to Werth's realism, guest artist Soodie Whitaker's acrylic paintings draw us into the dialogue between the world we live in and those we create in our minds. The refreshing energy of his paintings invites a closer look. Words and images splash against each other with a spirit of imagination and play.

Finally, when circling around to C Street Studios, where Linda Wise, David Hodes, Howard Emerson and Patricia Smith are featured artists for July, don't skip Mimi LaPlant's solo show at the Black Faun Gallery.

Described by Black Faun Gallery owner Keven Borque as "one of the preeminent abstract artists in the county," LaPlant is known for her bright palates and distinctively structured paintings. Borque and LaPlant hand picked works from her studio for a retrospective of LaPlant's varied images throughout the years. Many never-before-seen new works will be on display, as well. "Safe Harbor" one of LaPlant's featured paintings, exemplifies her style with a delicate balance of dark and light, archetypal outlines and a heavily layered narrative.

Be sure to tromp around Eureka's Old Town Saturday, July 5 from 6 p.m. to 9 p.m. to get your fill before it's over. There's something for everyone, even if all you want is dessert. ●

Expression of Freedom

Red lights, white noise and bluegrass

By Jennifer Savage

thesetlist@northcoastjournal.com

Hey, baby, it's the Fourth of July. What's on your celebration agenda? Debating whether Americans are truly free given the shackles of income inequality, lack of adequate health care and steep decline in quality education? Getting ripped along the river, burning pallets and blasting fireworks until the night sky is as lit as your buddy whooping and shooting down the beach? Throwing a backyard barbecue with friends playing guitar and your homebrew come to fruition? Crossing your fingers that your city's fireworks display doesn't get mired in fog and the kids don't hit a wall of exhaustion before it's all over? Stretching out along the couch with your herbally sedated critters, happy for the day off, but looking forward to the end of the noise, noise, noise?! It's your choice, people! Ain't that America, something to see, baby.

Whatever your expression of freedom, a little live music goes a long way. This week's highlights should spark something.

Thursday:

Ain't no party like my Nana's tea party

Gotta love a band whose tagline is "Party like your grandparents did." Buddy Reed & th' Rip It Ups apparently plan to positively destroy Plaza Grill Thursday night. The good times roll at 8 p.m., no cover.

Friday: In which we celebrate the freedom to describe oneself

Siren's Song boasts an "exotic dancer in full effect" for the tavern's July Fourth party. What constitutes "full effect" remains to be seen, but hopefully the offering is more original than it sounds. Speaking of sounds, those will be in attendance as well, specifically the "synthesized, rhythmic bass poetry" of Hypha, Wu Wei (a 21-year-old Los-Angeles-to-Humboldt-County transplant who "strives to combine the soul reaching sounds of ambient IDM together with the earthy bass of futuristic world hip-hop") and

Who: Gypsy Moon

When: Tuesday, July 8, 9 p.m.

Where: Humboldt Brews

Tickets: $10

audio/visual underground techno artist Wrye. Freedom might not be free, but this celebration of the birth of our nation is. Starts at 9 p.m. Also, all ages.

Saturday: Fecundity! In broad daylight!

The Arcata's Farmers' Market will play out with a soundtrack by Absynth Quintet this go-round. The band's blend of gypsy jazz and bluegrass is sure to add juiciness to your fruits, vitamins to your veggies and magic to your starts. Listen for tunes off the band's marvelous new album, Telepathy with Glowbugs, and marvel at the nine-fingered drummer. (We love you, Tofu!) Indoctrinate your children. Bask in the delight beginning at 10 a.m.

Saturday: Warm fuzzies

Oh, Nipplepotamus! Why would you play a show at the Alibi when I am out of town? Fans of the band are already ramp-ing up for the trio's Alien Scene album release show. For those inexperienced with the band's hypnotic twist on surfy-psychedelic-indie-rock — go get yourself some. (If Alien Scene were subject to old-school record promotion, the label on the cover would read "RIYL: BRMC.") I'm super bummed to miss this free, 21-and-over gig and would have happily stayed up late waiting for the music to start around 11 p.m. or so. Joining the Nips is Fort Dick, which features members of 33 1/3 and Indianola.

Tuesday: A splash of this, a dash of that

Let's say you wanted to create a band perfectly suited to play at Humboldt Brews. Its members would be from Colorado. They'd inspire dancing. They'd have instrumental chops to showcase an understanding of folk music ranging from "gypsy" to "full-on mountain stomps." They'd probably be produced by Dan Rodriguez of Elephant Revival. They would definitely have a clawhammer banjo. What luck! A band fitting that exact description will appear in the pub's excellent music room Tuesday night! Gypsy Moon is the name and Appalachia-meets-New-Orleans is the game. Tickets are $10, show is 21-and-over, things start happening around 9 p.m.

Planning ahead:

Rock show of note and more

Please make a note on your calendar — ready? Get to Friday, July 11. Okay? Write this down: "Qui, Alibi." Qui is one of those interesting bands that Alibi talent booker Ian Hiler manages to get even though technically the noise rock duo is "too big" for lil' ol' A-town. More on that next week.

Fans of gypsy tunes rarely go a full seven days without some band or another showing up to scratch that itch and next week is no exception. The always joyous Diego's Umbrella plays Humboldt Brews on Saturday, July 12 — advance tickets are $15 and advised. More at humboldtbrews.com.

Etc.

Full show listings in the Journal's Music and More grid, the Eight Days a Week calendar and online. Bands and promoters, send your gig info, preferably with a high-res photo or two, to music@northcoastjournal.com. ●

Burlesque may have come and gone as part of the theatrical canon, but it's alive and well in Humboldt. On Saturday, July 5 at 10:30 p.m., the Carlo Theatre will get a little more debauched. Red Light in Blue Lake ($20, 18 and over) is a night of bawdy cabaret, featuring live music, strong drinks and tawdry delights.

Leave your morals at the door — they'll be waiting for you when it's over.

Before The Beatles got psychedelic, they were just plain precious. 8 p.m. on Saturday, July 5 at the Eureka Theater, you can have visual proof of their adorable antics with a screening of A Hard Day's Night ($5). Can't wait? Warm up with more of the band's vintage film hijinks from 5 to 7:45 p.m. (free). After all, you've been working like a dog.

The Scotia Band is a rollicking celebration of community involvement, and at noon on Sunday, July 6 at the Humboldt Botanical Gardens, the band will play as part of the Music in the Garden series ($5).

Peruse the flowers, sip a root beer float (when's the last time you had one of those?) and let your toes get to tapping.

The Fourth of July is one of the few occasions when fire lights up the entire sky and nobody runs for help. There's more to Independence Day than gunpowder and bright lights, though. Humboldt County goes whole hog with festivals, jubilees and more.

The city of Fortuna starts things off early with a Fireworks Celebration on Thursday, July 3 at Newburg Park from 5:30 to 10:30 p.m. (free entry, $10 barbeque, $5 kids' barbeque). The Scotia Band provides all the tunes while you glut on grilled yumminess and the fireworks hit the air at nightfall.

On the Fourth of July proper, Ferndale's Main Street comes alive at 10 a.m. with fire engine rides, a parade and music from the Broadway Americana musical revue (free). At 7 p.m. the fun moves to the Ferndale Fairgrounds for fireworks, oohs and aahs (free).

Benbow State Park blows it up at 8 p.m. on Independence Day. Pack some food and lawn chairs, pay the day-use fee ($8) when you enter the park and have yourself a picnic while you wait for the show.

Further north, Arcata and Eureka each have their own day-long festivals. At 10 a.m., the Old Town Gazebo and surrounding streets will be filled with more than 100 vendor and activity booths, fire engines and live music from The Hip Joint, Polynesian Dancers, Ya Habibi Dance Collective and more (free). The fireworks start at 10 p.m., so grab a spot on the boardwalk for the best view.

Despite its lack of fireworks, Arcata is still pulling out all the stops. From 10 a.m. to 6 p.m., the plaza will be overrun with vendors, live music, Crabs players and more for the Fourth of July Jamboree (free). The Kinetic Paranormal Society hosts puppet shows and the Ridiculous Olympics for all of the kids in attendance, so make sure your little ones brush up on their octopus racing. "Training" begins at 10 a.m. (free).

Of course, you can always set off your own fireworks at home, but sparklers in your driveway aren't free and won't light up the whole sky.

Blue Lake is riddled with festivities thanks to the Mad River Festival. Unlike those wimpy festivals that last a day or two, MRF is nearly two months of the clown-y, theater-y, crafty fun that Dell'Arte does so well. The Trash Mash-Up is about as DIY as you can get, in terms of garbage, anyway.

The concept is simple, but the end result is anything but. Attend one of the three workshops and, with the help of SCRAP Humboldt and the McCracken Sisters, use non-dumpstered trash, creativity and sheer willpower to create costumes dynamic enough to be called "Maskostumes." The elaborate ensembles are a combination of internationally inspired clothing and masks, and have to be parade-ready for the Mash-Up Bash Pageant during the Annie and Marie Day Parade.

The workshops are Thursday and Friday, July 10 and 11, from 5 p.m. to 7:30 p.m. and Saturday, July 12 from 11 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. at Dell'Arte's Big Top Tent (free). You get your chance to show off your "Maskostume" on Sunday, July 13 at 10 a.m. during the Annie and Mary Day Parade at the Blue Lake Industrial Park. Following the parade, that costume is yours. Forever.

Marky Mark can't save us from Extinction

By Dev Richards

filmland@northcoastjournal.com

Review

TRANSFORMERS: AGE OF EXTINCTION. I don't seek out Michael Bay movies, but I don't really avoid them either. Once you've seen a dozen or so helicopters explode over a freeway, you've sort of seen them all. Inevitably, though, I end up seeing the films as a tag-a-long, at a friend's house, when I'm drinking and generally making bad decisions. Bay lured me in this time, though, with promises of dinosaurs and Marky Mark, Stanley Tucci and not-Shia LaBeouf. When you dangle dinos and robots, I'm going to come at you like a kitten to yarn. Transformers: Age of Extinction was nearly three hours of horrible dialogue, overly complex and amateur plot lines and hardly any dinosaurs.

Age of Extinction is the fourth in the never-ending movie mill of the Transformers series, all directed by Michael Bay. After the massive damage to the city of Chicago in the third film, the United States government has shifted its position on the alien robots known as transformers. The CIA has launched a clandestine campaign called "The Cemetery Wind." Really. Under the direction of Agent Harold Attinger (Kelsey Grammer), the agency teamed up with its own transformer, Lockdown, to hunt down and destroy any of the remaining autobots. When Cade Yeager (Mark Wahlberg) buys a broken down semi truck to scrap for parts, he's unaware that he has put himself in the middle of a war zone. Cue the car chases through cornfields, robots on rooftops fighting (surprise!) helicopters and hours of city-leveling destruction. Meanwhile, Joshua Joyce (Stanley Tucci) and his billion-dollar company, KSI, have discovered the secret to the transformers' technology. They've harnessed the power of an element they have dubbed "Transformium." And that is where they lost me and I could no longer contain my laughter.

Sorry people in the next row. From there the plot thickens like the layer of film on top of an ignored bowl of tomato soup.

The carousel of familiar faces makes the whole film a little easier to swallow. Picturing Grammer (Frasier) and Tucci (The Devil Wears Prada) arguing with pretend robots in front of a green screen takes the edge off during the more frustrating moments of clichéd plot points about fathers and daughters. T.J. Miller (How to Train Your Dragon) is an annoying distraction as the socially diffused surfer sidekick, but it's easy to see his appeal to a younger, teenaged crowd. Nicole Peltz (Bates Motel) does a fine job as the dotting but sassy daughter to Wahlberg's sexy and over-protective father role. There are also brief cameos that draw you back in when the redundancy of the action sequences grows stale.

It's hard to imagine this film appealing to even the easiest action film demographic: 8 to 10-year-old boys. It has a runtime of two hours and 45 minutes, which was too long for my "adult" attention span. Michael Bay held up his end of the deal, action-wise, but writer Ehren Kruger (The Brothers Grimm) brought a tome to a comic book fight. PG13. 165m.

SIR WILLIAM JONES (1746–1794), CHIEF JUSTICE OF CALCUTTA, SPOKE 13 LANGUAGES FLUENTLY AND KNEW 28 MORE “REASONABLY WELL.” HIS PROPOSAL THAT SANSKRIT, PERSIAN AND MOST EUROPEAN LANGUAGES ARE COGNATE IS NOW UNIVERSALLY ACCEPTED.

Quest for the Mother Tongue: Part 1

By Barry Evans

fieldnotes@northcoastjournal.com

According to most linguists, all languages trace their roots to a single mother tongue, dubbed “Proto-World,” “Proto-Sapiens” or the “Ur” language. Invented more than 100,000 years ago, before humans left our African homeland, it spawned about a dozen “proto-languages” from which the world’s 6,000 living languages (and countless dead ones) emerged. Proto-Indo-European (PIE), for instance, was spoken around six or eight millenia ago in the steppes north of the Black Sea before diverging into a bevy of tongues, one of which you’re reading now.

The strenuous and only half-successful efforts of linguists to reconstruct PIE and its progeny over the past 200-plus years give a sense of how difficult it is to recreate a long-dead language. PIE sired 10 well-attested “clades,” or sub-families, of languages (and several more disputed ones) including the three from which English is mostly derived: Proto-Germanic, Proto-Italic and Proto-Greek. To reconstruct PIE, historical linguists look at common words in languages they suspect to be related, such as Spanish, Portuguese, Romanian and Italian, and hypothesize rules for how they evolved from earlier roots (see “Grimm’s Law: the Phoenician Connection,” Nov. 15, 2012). In the case of the Romance languages mentioned above, the task is made much easier by our knowledge of their common ancestor, Latin. Usually, of course, we don’t have access to a written parent tongue.

If this sounds complicated, it is. Linguists have taken more than 200 years (since 1786, when Sir William Jones, a British career diplomat in India, proposed that Sanskrit, Greek, Latin, Persian, Gothic and Celtic had a common root) to reconstruct PIE by comparing the lexicons, morphologies and grammars of its many offspring. Even so, our knowledge is still very limited, and sounding out just a single well-formed sentence in PIE is still the subject of conjecture.

Given the difficulty of reconstructing PIE, a language spoken just a few thousand years ago, how much more problematic is it to identify words from more than 100,000 years ago in Proto-World? For that daunting task, a few brave (or foolhardy, take your pick) linguists have taken a different approach to the “comparative-reconstruction” method that led to re-creating PIE and other proto languages. These mavericks use a controversial technique known as “mass-comparison,” that is, comparing hundreds of languages from around the world looking for commonalities, without worrying too much about how they actually evolved.

Twenty years ago, two of the most outspoken of the Proto-World linguists, Merritt Ruhlen and John Bengtson, published a list of 27 “global etymologies” for such common words as “water,” “finger,” “one,” and “two.” Speakers of the mother language may have used aqwa for water, tik for finger or one, pal for two and so on. Some of these — perhaps all — are a real stretch. Take aqwa: sure, we can see Latin aqua and a couple of other less obvious derivations, but Ruhlen and Bengtson claim that the words for water in various proto-languages, including nki, engi, niru, namaw and gugu, are related. For the vast majority of comparative linguists, extrapolations like these are just too much to accept. For that matter, it beggars the imagination to suppose that aqwa could have survived unchanged for more than 100,000 years!

So reconstructing any actual words used by the first speakers is probably a lost cause. However, we can still make some intelligent guesses at what kind of language, in very broad terms, they used. We’ll take a look at this next week. ●

Barry Evans (barryevans9@yahoo.com) struggled unsuccessfully for five years, five hours a week, to learn Latin in his childhood.
